Hush Hush Unit Will War on Gangs

The members of the rejuvenated police intelligence unit will speak many languages, wear no uniforms, and make no public appearances, William Balswick, aid to Police Commissioner Timothy J. O'Connor, declared Friday.

Balswick, conferring with Lt. Daniel I. McCain, new commander of the intelligence unit, said many of the members will "work underground" and when they come upon information which needs to be acted upon, it will be handled by some other police agency "so as not to impair or destroy the efficiency of the members of the unit."

20 Men Selected

Balswick said the 20 men ordered into the unit Friday were selected "several months ago" after careful screening of a larger list of suggested members. Some of the men speak several languages and several have military experience as intelligence officers.

The commissioner's aid said the purpose of the unit is to "delve into gangland activities and study the operations of new outfits." He did not explain the significance of "new outfits." He said the unit would also be on the lookout for gangland invasion of labor activities.

Will Pick 20 Others

The unit will have a total of more than 40 men. Lt. Maurice Higgins, who has been assigned to the commissioner's office in the police building at 1121 S. State st., will assist McCain in supervising the investigators.

The 20 new members are:

Kavorik Bogosian, Edward Carey, Patrick Conlon, John E. Coughlin, Lee Dehnke, John Egan, Daniel Gleason, Charles M. Jenkins, Bronislaw Jaworski, Clarence Kerr, Joseph Mildice, Gerald McGuinn, Anthony Murkana, Clement Ostrowski, Anthony Rossetti, Louis D. Schatz, Thomas R. Sweeney Jr., Fred Stocke, John D. Zietek, and Clement Zukoski.

Higgins, 44, an attorney, is a graduate of the FBI academy and the National Police academy. He has been a policeman for 20 years.

Mildice was one of the key investigators in the rounding up of the hammer slayers of Alvin Palmer in 1956. Kerr helped apprehend Richard Carpenter, slayer of Detective William Murphy.
