Chicago is divided into 25 police districts. Each police district has between 9 and 15 police beats, with a total of 285 beats throughout the city. It is at the beat level that the department's strategy of police-community partnership and problem-solving is carried out.

Each police district is led by a district commander. In addition to uniformed beat and rapid response officers, each district has teams of civilian-dressed tactical officers. Each district also has a community policing office that helps coordinate police-community partnership and problem-solving at the beat level and provides special services to senior citizens.

Districts are organized into larger units called areas. Since 1992 there have been five police areas in Chicago, each commanded by an area deputy chief. For patrol-operational reasons, in 2001 the 1st and 18th Districts, which comprise Chicago's Central Business District, were placed under command of a deputy chief in an area referred to as the Central Control Group. In 2002, the boundary between the 1st and 21st Districts was moved to reallocate service demand more efficiently. As a result, the area of the 1st District was increased and the area of the 21st District was decreased by approximately one-third (.31) of a square mile.

The Bureau of Investigative Services continues to rely on the five-area organization for the assignment of detectives, who follow up, or investigate, crimes occurring in the districts comprising the area.
